What's new:

of Haute Couture This is the first interview with someone in the Archeryghos. This is the greatest science fiction RPG sourcebook of all time. I mean, the thing is literally called S.F.RPG. I've been practicing my bass guitar since I was 7 years old, and aged 11, I decided to move to LA to study music. The only problem was, it didn't work out. I started getting in trouble for being a total mess. Soon I had to drop out of school. All my support staff left me with the choice to either kill myself or get an intense psych treatment through the entire year. I opted to do the latter. Coming back to school after trying to commit suicide and getting psych helped me a lot. And that's when I met my new best friend, the games developer Connie Seymour. I decided to create it with her as a hobby project, and we decided to bring it to life as a full production studio. We started working together on what is now called Archers, directed by Brad Purdon. Studio Haute Couture on June 6th will open to the public, once it opens to the press. Rewriting history Andy Charchan: Can you tell me the story of how it all started? Connie Seymour: I will. I began writing S.F.RPG to share my love of science fiction with my loved ones, but then I saw the first episode of "China Beach", which told me that there was no way I could write anything interesting. So, I switched to writing about real life people and situations. I turned my family and friends to be sci-fi fanatics that I could then immerse them in the world of science fiction. I knew I had to write something

The place where the first transdimensional aliens lived)?” (i.e. If they really had existed). It was the “House of Dark Shadows” blueprint, but with modern day technology, settings, and characters. As I wrote, I kept finding
